What is ScottyLabs?

ScottyLabs is a student-driven organization devoted to encouraging innovation at Carnegie Mellon. We use our technical skills to give people the resources and help they need to bring their ideas to fruition.

What do we do?

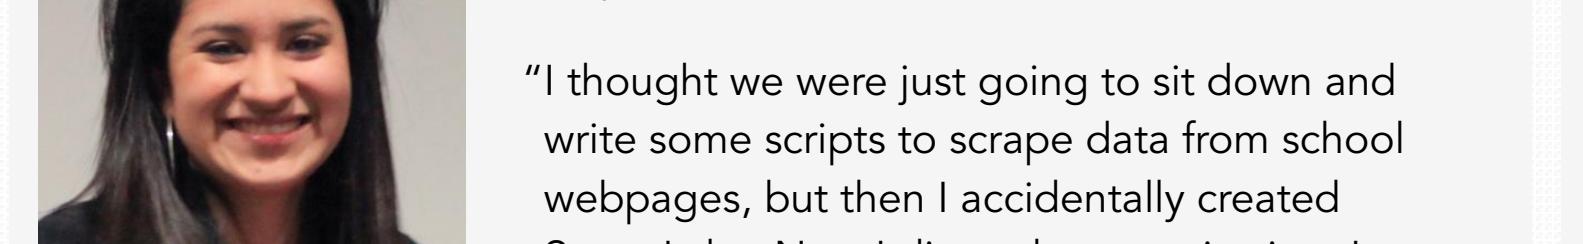

SkillSwap

I'll teach you color theory if you teach me graph theory.

Come learn from other students at SkillSwap. There are workshops about everything from

Who are these people?

Amy Quispe

Computer Science, 2013

Director

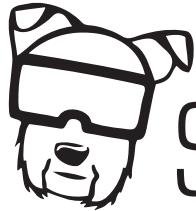

"I thought we were just going to sit down and write some scripts to scrape data from school webpages, but then I accidentally created ScottyLabs. Now I direct the organization. I usually squirm when people call me CEO."

Are You a Student?

If you're a student at Carnegie Mellon, you can get involved with ScottyLabs by attending our events (like TartanHacks, SkillSwap), or by joining our organization.

If you're a college student somewhere besides CMU but you like what ScottyLabs does, you can get involved in our APIs Everywhere project.

Organization?

ScottyLabs as an organization has lots of friends—basically partners (who help us with our projects) and sponsors (who help to fund us and our events).

Carnegie Mellon School of Computer Science

The Carnegie Mellon School of Computer Science has given ScottyLabs space and helped to organize several ScottyLabs events.

Project Olympus

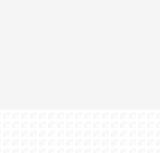

Project Olympus supports start-ups founded by CMU students and professors. We have worked closely with them while organizing TartanHacks for the first time, and ScottyLabs and Olympus will continue to partner in the future.
